

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

The Reception of His Royal Highness at Cincinnati—His Ride About Town and Visit to the Pigeon—The Grand Ball at the Opera House—How the Prince's Partners Were and How the Affair was Managed.

Cincinnati, Sept. 29, 1860.
The Prince and suite arrived at one o'clock this morning. In consequence of a bright train having run off the track they were delayed three hours. They were accompanied by Major Bishop, Judge Storer, W. Wiley, President of the Chamber of Commerce; John Torrence, President of the City Council; Rufus King, President of the School Board, and R. B. Bowler, who met the train at Cochran's, and tendered the hospitality of the city to the guests.

In spite of the late hour at which the Prince of Wales and suite arrived last night, quite a crowd collected at the Burnetts Hotel to see him. He was taken upon the roof, in the private railway, and the crowd, cheering and pushing in great style, saw nothing of the Prince.

The Prince has the ladies' drawing room for a parlor, but some of his suite were put in the story next to the roof, in No. 10, and were dissatisfied there.

Early this morning a great crowd collected in front of the hotel.

At ten o'clock the Mayor went up to call the Prince, and found him still asleep. Soon after the Prince came down to breakfast in a private room, and the crowd, waiting for the first opportunity of seeing him, rushed, hurrahed and opened a lane for him to pass.

On his return he ran the gauntlet swiftly, and hurried up stairs on a full trot, causing much disappointment among the people.

When the Prince entered his carriage to drive through the city several thousand persons had collected, cheering enthusiastically. The crowd scrambled after the carriage, blocking up the street in every available spot, occupied the sidewalks and lined the windows. The street was full of carriages, drawn up, loaded with spectators. All hurrahed, some for the Prince, some for Old Abe, Dug, Bell and other political favorites, in every case, according to the Western practice, shortening the name to a syllable.

The ladies waved their handkerchiefs, and the Prince bowed repeatedly.

The Prince drove through the principal streets, and then through a portion of the town where he was killed, and where the odor was more evident than pleasant, and then out to the village of Clifton, to the residence of Mr. Bowler.

A great crowd collected upon the open square to see the Prince attend the fire engine. He did not return to the house, however, but drove directly to the hotel, went to bed, and slept till dinner time. Even the servants are followed by crowds.

Mr. Pike, proprietor of the Opera House, arranged the ball for this evening, and it was extensively advertised that the Prince would attend. The tickets were printed for the "Reception of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales,"—since here in the West the people have given up the title Lord and Baron, and insist on the Prince preserving his title.

The Opera House, where the ball was held, was most brilliantly illuminated, and the parquette was covered over to the stage, open to the wall and decorated with national flags. In the building is almost as large as the Academy of Music in New York.

A great crowd collected in front of the hotel, and a great one in front of the Opera House.

After many cheers and mistakes on the part of the crowd, the Prince at last arrived, probably on horseback. The Ball Committee held a brief conference with him in regard to partners, and the whole party were then taken into a private box.

About one thousand persons were present. The ladies were most richly dressed, and the company was magnificent.

After a few moments delay the ball was commenced with the old fashioned promenade. The Prince then opened the ball, the royal party and others dancing upon the stage, a few others on the parquette. The first dance was the "Jubilee" quadrille, the Prince having for his partner Mrs. Col. Pike, wife of one of the committee members of the Opera House, and the originator of the ball.

Everything at first appeared stiff and formal. The people seemed afraid of the Prince, and the Prince of the people, and but few danced. The Prince also made several mistakes, not being as well in American style; but he soon recovered himself, and enjoyed himself in his usual style. He was dressed in evening dress, with white necktie, and wore all the suite. In the first dance Lord Elchenbrook danced a six.

The programme was given to the Prince for a selection of dances, and he adhered strictly to quadrilles, with the exception of the last.

He danced the second quadrille with Miss Greenbeck, daughter of the Hon. John Greenbeck, ex-M. C., and one of the committee; the third quadrille with Miss Taylor, of Newport, Kentucky, that State being largely represented; and the fourth dance, the "Lancers," with Miss H. McGregor, of Mount Auburn.

The Prince was still dancing at the time we are compelled to close our report.

The cohesiveness and formality on the part of the Prince and people early disappeared, and all seemed to enjoy themselves highly—more than the Prince of Wales, who, though apparently very much embarrassed, chatted with his partners, led them to their guardians, and promenade around the room, to the intense satisfaction of all.

The committee selected the partners beforehand, and the Prince merely signified his approval of the list.

He was to leave at half-past eleven.

On entering the ball room the band played "God Save the Queen," as at the Canada ball.

The Prince attends St. John's church to-morrow morning, the venerable Bishop Mohr preaching, and in the afternoon goes to Christ church.

On Monday, at nine o'clock, he starts for Pittsburg. It is said the Prince will stop at St. Louis, where he will be met by a large party, and that he will spend the night there.

The Prince of Wales and the Philadelphia Philistines.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 29, 1860.
It is stated that a committee of one hundred citizens have arranged for a grand opera entertainment in honor of the Prince of Wales, to come off on the evening of the 10th of October. The entire company of the New York Academy of Music is engaged for the occasion, and the combination of musical talent will be the strongest ever witnessed in this city. The Prince is to select the programme.

I am seated in the small parlor of the little hotel at Dwight, writing by the light of a solitary spirit lamp. Pleasant recollections of a day spent in driving over and shooting on the grand prairie, and visiting in the village crowd upon me, and I write as one in love with his subject.

I set out early, and drove across the grassy plain by a new path, and started flights of prairie birds, and saw the horizon sparsely dotted with farm houses, surrounded by fields of Indian corn. Mile after mile I continued my journey, and still the scene remained the same—farm after farm, undulating after undulating. Once I met a herdsman in charge of some cattle, but he was the only specimen of humanity I saw in my long drive through these vast solitudes.

On miles before the village I came to several groves that looked like islands rising from the sea of green. These dotted the presence of water. One of them fringed Gooseberry Lake, in the vicinity of which the Prince passed the whole of yesterday. Into its shade he retired for luncheon and partook of some potatoes baked for him on the spot, and then lighted his cigar at the first which—a firebrand accidentally ignited a tree.

Great Prairie is a hundred and seventy miles long by twenty-five to fifty broad, and is more or less settled over its entire extent. Hardly any one could fail to venture a supposition that this vast tract of country was once the bed of a lake, or that it will eventually be so densely populated as the adjacent regions.

In the meantime the extreme fertility of the soil, which is a dark siliceous loam, is a source of mere wealth to the farmer. The Prince returned at half past seven this evening for the second day the Prince and suite remained at the hotel.

of their quarters, which, although inferior to those of the Richmond House, gave complete satisfaction.

The Prince remained at home during the rest of the evening.
